

WORKBOOK—SECTION FOUR

Your SEEK Story Framework

Use this section to build the narrative context for a learning project. SEEK grounds your learner in meaning before asking for effort.

The Story Foundation

16. What is the name of your learning project — course, program, training, coaching relationship, or curriculum? The name of my learning project-course is called Kairova project.

17. Who is the central character of this story? (The learner themselves, a fictional user, a professional persona, etc.)

Muffin is the central character of this story

18. What challenge or problem does this character face at the beginning? Be specific and vivid.

Muffin goes through a challenge of figuring out how to make it out of her awake in a scientific laboratory that has her captive on a foreign planet

114

19. What does the world look like once this character has successfully completed the learning journey?

Muffin is in outer space and has discovered the solar system but the world still looks the same

The Narrative Arc

20. Write a 2-3 sentence story opener you could use to begin your course, session, program, or module. Make it personal and specific.

Muffin woke from a deep, dreamlike sojourn expecting to find herself somewhere familiar, but instead, she opened her eyes beneath the harsh white lights of a scientific laboratory, her wrists restrained to a cold metal table. As panic set in, she realized she wasn't a patient, she was a captive, and the scientists watching her already knew far more about her than she did.

21. How will you weave this story throughout the material? Describe 2-3 places where the narrative will resurface.

Muffin's story will resurface throughout the material as a way to connect each lesson to her journey. First, we will return to the laboratory as Muffin discovers clues about why she was captured, introducing the key concepts of the course. Later, as she learns more about the scientists and begins finding ways to escape, each challenge will reflect the skills and ideas covered in the material, leading to a final moment where Muffin uses everything she has learned to regain her freedom.
